Horizon Ascend Yield Index

INDEX KEY FACTS

- A systematic strategy that invests in yield-focused fixed income ETFs, and assesses allocations based on factors such as credit quality, duration and income type.
- Diversification across yield-focused sectors is designed to both reduce overall volatility and broaden the sources of yield in the quest for more stable returns.
- The process uses a trend-following strategy to increase or maintain exposure to ETFs with what we believe have positive trends, while reducing exposure to ETFs in downtrends with the goal of minimizing losses

INDEX DESCRIPTION

The Horizon Ascend Yield Index allocates across a diversified universe of fixed income ETFs to seek returns and higher yields, while using a tactical trend-following process to manage risk. This fixed income universe includes broad exposure to U.S. treasury securities, U.S. high yield and investment grade bonds, convertible bonds, preferred stock, senior secured loans, international bonds, and emerging market bonds. Allocations rely on research on volatility and trend-based signals, and are adjusted as frequently as monthly in an attempt to capture upside. The index targets consistency and risk management using a market state risk control process on each security that may adjust as frequently as daily. These three techniques - broad diversification, trend following, and risk management - govern the core of the process and are designed to provide the opportunity for growth under both good and bad market environments. The index is designed to create an alternative to passive fixed income.
